Most citizens in the United States, engage with local governments much more often than with their state or federal government offices. Of the 87,576 governmental entities in the U.S, only 51 are state and federal. The other 87,525 fuel every city, town, township, borough, and municipality in which we live.

We have proudly been of service to many government facilities, from new building construction to renovations and needed upgrades. Government entities consist of local authorities, police departments, planning commissions, school districts, and councils of government.
